Self-Assessment

Assessments are sometimes hard to create. When there is no purpose and objective in doing as assessment, it is hard. When there is a purpose, and a teacher has properly taught the students, both teachers and students will not be frustrated with assessment. That is my experience from making this assessment.

I think the concern in making assessment is more about the choice that you provide for them to choose. I think it is very hard to come up with a choice that is not too tricky for them, but challenging enough. I am still learning to find the balance between the two.

I also think having variety of assessment is fun. In reading class, the students can get too tired of reading words to words. To get them excited and enjoy the assessment, teachers should make it fun.
